Introduction: Africans and Britons | Africans and Britons ...

British African-Caribbean people are residents of the United Kingdom who are of Caribbean descent whose ancestry originates back to Africa. As immigration to the United Kingdom from Africa increased in the late 20th century, the term has sometimes been used to include British residents solely of African origin or as a term to define all Black British residents, though the phrase African and ...

Africans also turn up during the period as the familiars of witches, for instance in the trial of Alice Kyteler of Kilkenny in 1423, in which she was accused of having intercourse with an 'Ethiop' who could also turn into a black cat or black shaggy dog. Thus there are hints even as early as this of a dual social role for Africans – people to be laughed at and people to be feared. In 1596 ...
